

Young, Fab & Royal

Q+A rounds up of the most stylish royalty from across the globe

By Isabella Redmond Styles

Imagine from birth you're besieged by designers begging to dress you in their designs so you can take your place on the best-dressed list of glossies like Vogue and Vanity Fair. Anything and everything you wear can either be slated as a new trend or scrutinized by the public and media alike. Welcome to the world of being a royal princess and/or queen. From Princess Mabel of Orange-Nassau to Queen Rania of Jordan, Q+A celebrates the royal nuptials of Prince William and Kate Middleton with a roundup of the most stylish royal fashion icons from across the globe.

Princess Reema Bint Bandar Al Saud (Not Pictured)

A princess, humanitarian and businesswoman all in one. Princess Reema is CEO of ALFA International and AL HAMA LLC, the luxury retailers who are responsible for the Middle Eastern outputs of Donna Karan and British luxury department store, Harvey Nichols. She's also found time to become involved with the Zahra Breast Cancer Association which helps raise awareness about the disease in her native Saudi Arabia. And she runs a spa on the side. We doubt this princess has time to look for peas under her mattress.

Styled by:

StyleChic™

Princess Charlotte Casiraghi

We'd be a little disappointed if this Princess Charlotte was said to be the belle of the ball, including blood red body con that left very little to the imagination. A stalwart of Vanity Fair's Best Dressed, you can find her at Paris Fashion Week kicking back with Kaiser Karl.

on Grace Kelly and her mother, more daring, colorful creations

Princess Mabel of Orange-Nassau

Definitely not your ordinary princess. No sturdy tweeds and suede knee-high boots for this Dutch royal. Princess Mabel has a serious penchant for Dutch design duo Viktor & Rolf, so much so that she asked them to create her wedding dress. A pretty creation, made even prettier by the dazzling tiara atop her head, adorned with bows that gradually increased in size towards the train of the dress. Avant-garde, bold and humorous, words not often used to describe a royal's style, but totally applicable to this princess. We like.

Queen Rania of Jordan

An Arabian glamazon, Queen Rania has royal poise and grace by the bucket load as well as a knack for the latest trend. She has couture nailed, favoring Armani Prive, Elie Saab and Stephane Rolland as well as young upstarts like Project Runway's Rami Kashou. If that's not enough she was recently voted the second most beautiful royal ever, only losing out on first place to Princess Casiraghi's grandmomma, Grace Kelly. Ms. Middleton should sit up and take note.

Princess Elisabeth Von Thurn Und Taxis

Quite possibly the first royal blogger thanks to her 'Princess Diaries,' which feature posts that are witty, intelligent and surprisingly humble. Princess Thurn Und Taxis of Regensburg, Germany, is a writer and contributor by profession, which goes some way to explaining her bohemian style. She would rather be seen in cool but effortless pieces by Vanessa Bruno or Duru Olowu than bespoke ruffles.

Princess Reema Bint Bandar Al Saud (Not Pictured)

A princess, humanitarian and businesswoman all in one. Princess Reema is CEO of ALFA International and AL HAMA LLC, the luxury retailers who are responsible for the Middle Eastern outputs of Donna Karan and British luxury department store, Harvey Nichols. She's also found time to become involved with the Zahra Breast Cancer Association which helps raise awareness about the disease in her native Saudi Arabia. And she runs a spa on the side. We doubt this princess has time to look for peas under her mattress.

